GOULD OUT WRESTLES
NORWAY 33-26

In a game featured by inefficient refereeing Gould Academy defeated Norway by the score of 33-26. Both teams

UPON THE HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS OF THE LAND

(By D. J. Welsh.)

AFTER graduating from college at the impressionable age of twenty-three Lee Barton threw off the restraining garments of a conventional life and set out upon the highways and byways of the land, ever cherishing a subtle faith in a romance that lurked just around the next corner. A merry vagabond Lee, ready to embrace golden days, lady loves, proven treasure, grails, or whatever delectable the gods of chance delighted to show upon him. Needless of his father's desire that he enter the commercial lists and establish a branch office of the Barton Glass company in a distant city, he took the road. And now, after months, he found himself on a bench in a bustling midwestern city, penniless and rather seedy in appearance. It was the same city, he noted, in which his father desired to open a branch office.

A nearby bench an attractive of about twenty sat reading a paper. After a while she dropped the paper, and as it fluttered to the ground Lee saw her dash furtively at eyes with a small handkerchief.

"Why, the girl's crying," he muttered to himself. "A fair damsel in distress. To the rescue, Sir Galahad!" He strode across the walk and seated himself on the bench beside the girl. "Pardon this unseemly liberty," he said, "but something in the paper apparently distressed you. Tell me what it is and I'll go over and fetch the editor to a couple of was reading the want ads," answered the girl. "Looking for a job." "A job?" repeated Lee. "You mean a job of work?" "Of course," replied the girl. "Work." "Work—what a vulgar word," pronounced Lee. "What an uncouth word, too. Why, the idea is—"

"You just came over to make fun of me," sobbed the girl. "Please go home. Perhaps, if you were hungry tired—as I am—you'd—"

Lee had an honest face, backed by a personality plus. He set himself gently to the pleasing task of winning the girl's confidence, and in a short time they were chatting amiably. The park was a small restaurant, with charming politeness, invited the girl to dinner.

"I go on one condition," answered the girl. "Providing that as soon as you have finished dinner you'll let me go home unharmed. Your only reward will be the happy thought that you have done a kind deed."

Lee consented, smilingly, to these terms. They entered the restaurant where were soon enjoying a tasty and comfortable dinner. The girl proved a most agreeable dinner companion, and Lee drew out her pathetic story, which was the old tale of a working girl in an invalid widowed mother's support. Her name was Rose Fraser, and she was an expert stenographer. Although her story moved deeply, Lee took a huge delight in playing her face and found a vast store in her company. The meal was an end all too soon for Lee.

"How well sick to our little agreement," he announced. "So you just run off. But here's my last request. In five days you will see a want ad in local papers, in which the Barton Glass company advertises for a stenographer. If you're still afflicted with the vulgar impulse to work please appear at in person. I remember Barton Plate Glass company."

As the door closed behind the figure of the girl Lee rose and hurried back into the kitchen. He calmly removed his coat, and stood looking at the cook and the proprietor of the restaurant, a corpulent Greek gentleman, had led his post at the cash register and was bustling back into the kitchen.

"What's that?" he blundered. "Is going on? What?" "I am going home," said the girl. "I am going home, my dear sir, at you. Be careful of your blood," admonished Lee. "That girl was hungry, perhaps starved, but not for me. So I let her go home to rest, perhaps her secret young life. Very well, I'm sure. I congratulate you. Now to business. For I person you are a business man. How many must I work in order to get those two excellent meals and earn a nice, bright, shining dollar—United States currency?"

First the proprietor was quite shocked by Lee's gift defense, but then smiled and entered into the spirit of the situation. "I don't know what your game is, but I'll tell you," said Lee. "I'll dish, help the cook and bus and make yourself generally useful 10 p. m. you can have supper for 10 cents. I'll give you the dollar."

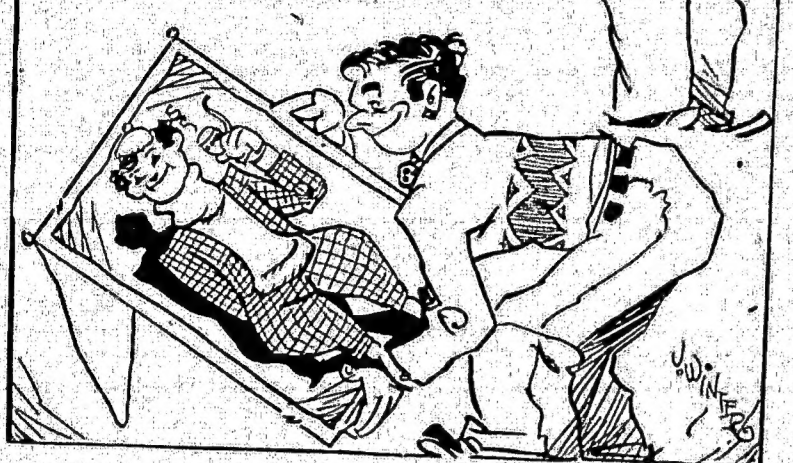

At 10:30 Lee was in the telegraph office writing a message to his father and much worried father. He was ready to open branch office at

College Daze

By James Lewis Hays

Skinamaree! Skinamaree!
Ho for the college daze!
Dad was a freshman once, you know,
When peg pants were the craze,
Bulldog pipe, bulldog shoes,
Side whiskers, broad cravat,
Dad was a sheik all slick and sleek,
Topped off with a bowler hat!

So, Son, when Dad gets good and mad
At your college clothes and ways
Just find a photo of dear old Dad
That was posed in the good old days—
Bowler hat, swallow tails,
Sideburns, cravat, and howl!
College clothes were as funny then
(And no funnier) as now.

once in this city," he wrote. "If O. K. wire expense money and send—"

At 10 o'clock he was curled up for his night's slumber on the sawdust pile of a lumber mill. For sawdust is clean and easy to brush from one's clothing.

Four days later he was sitting in a swivel chair in a spacious office located in one of the city's principal business buildings, watching a sign painter embellish the outer door with "Barton Plate Glass Co." Also he appeared to be waiting for some one. Three young ladies had already applied for the stenographic position in response to his ad, but had been summarily dismissed. Then the well-remembered figure of Rose Fraser appeared in the open door.

"Recognition was immediate. 'You—you!' she gasped. 'Why—' 'You're hired!' shouted Lee. 'Take off your hat and coat.'"

Eskimo Offer of Wife
Just Friendly Gesture
Something should be said about the legendary eagerness of an Eskimo to offer his wife to every passing stranger and the wife's eagerness to be so offered. The report is gently exaggerated.

Every good Eskimo provider, in the course of time, is likely to accumulate a number of superfluous women. Each winter many hunters at the ice edge, thirty miles or more from land, are lost, and because of this and other reasons there is a chronic deficiency of men.

Eskimo economy rests inescapably on the co-operation of man and woman. The woman cures fish and venison, tries out blubber for oil and does a thousand other things; and all through the winter evenings she chews away on lacy, lacy skins of seals, making them as soft and pliable as cloth and fit for clothing. In turn she is dependent upon the hunter.

Since an Eskimo man has a kindly, friendly nature presumably he shows consideration to the extra women who, because of the death of their men relations, come into his family. To call those women his wives, however, is a gross misuse of the word.

They are, more often, only so many additional mouths to feed. When an Eskimo presses one of his so-called wives upon the passing stranger he is very likely hoping that the stranger may be moved to make a bid for her. —Jonathan Mitchell in the Mentor Magazine.

Holstein Cattle Winter
in Luxurious Quarters
Speaking of the winter care given the famous Holstein cattle by the dairymen of Wisconsin, Holland, the National Geographic society says: "Horn and docket are under one roof, which rises high into the sky in order to provide loft space for the immense amount of hay needed as cattle feed during the long winter. The whole gives the appearance of a one-story cottage pushed low into the earth by weight of an immense snowed roof, which reaches above the tops of the tall trees lining the road."

International Bridge
The Ambassador bridge between Detroit and Sandwich was constructed at a total cost of $22,500,000. Negotiations were started in 1924 and actual construction on the project began about the middle of the year 1927. The bridge is a toll bridge, the admission rates being 5 cents per passenger and 30 cents per passenger automobile.

Wide Use of Amulets

Amulets, writes Frank H. Vizetelly, editor of the New Standard dictionary, were used once not only for the protection of men and women, but also of cattle. The so-called Antonine medals were very much in demand for this purpose, and were hung upon horses, asses, and oxen, for Antony of Padua had been the patron of the horse and the ass in his day. Cowbells, like bells hung upon infants, were intended originally to frighten away evil spirits, and their use in later times to help the herdsmen to trace the cattle or identify their beasts is a much later idea. Charms against charms also were worn.

Nothing New

The young son of an Indianapolis physician is intensely interested in moths. He reads everything that comes to hand concerning them. One day when his father saw him poring over a big volume in the library, he said:

"What are you reading, son?" The son replied: "Oh, about moths, but they don't tell me anything I don't already know of at home."

The interested parent asked: "Well, what is the name of your book?" when son answered:

"All Moths Should Know."

Apparently a Highway Victim

Hobbs, aged four, had accompanied his mother on a visit to the home of an over-ice maiden great-aunt. Cut off from day and days before, he was careful about everything he said and did, and under time came when he became eager for he was told that chicken was on the menu.

When this delectable food was served, and Hobbs observed that there were no "dumplings," but instead were shredded patties, he exclaimed:

"This chicken must have been run over!"

Growth of Sand Dunes

The sand dunes along the shores of lakes are formed by the wind. A cold breeze blowing along the beach carries some sand with it. It meets some obstacle, a pile of driftwood or perhaps merely a tuft of grass. Some of the sand is deposited and a tiny dune is formed. More and more sand is added until a large mound is formed, sometimes rising to a height of 200 feet. The wind not only builds up dunes, but tears them down, so that the sand dunes are constantly changing in form and position.

Great American Rivers

The Mississippi river is about 2,500 miles long. It is the longest river in the world. It flows from the north to the south, and empties into the Gulf of Mexico. It is the lifeblood of the American West, and has been the source of many great battles and wars.

Huh?

Some Americans were standing in front of St. Paul's cathedral in London. A fellow countryman came up and stood near them, apparently debating in the privacy of the cathedral's beauty. Suddenly she turned to one of the group. "What do you say to that church weight?" she asked. —London Tit Bits.

Electricity From Rug

The bureau of standards says that electricity generated by walking on a heavy rug is a common experience in winter when the heated air makes the rug dry. There is no effective way of preventing such charges except by increasing the humidity of the air. The electrical energy is small.

Amazed! Way Tanlac Relieves "Rheumatism"

For years the remarkable results obtained from Tanlac in the treatment of general run-down conditions have amazed his users, but most surprising of all is the quick relief this remarkable medicine gives in cases of "rheumatism" and stomach ills that yield to nothing else.

Men and women who thought themselves beyond human aid, who offered to part with their last dollar and sold their last ounce of strength, have been cured by Tanlac. Eggs by Fiat

They are still finding it difficult in Russia to provision the industrial centers. It is mostly, of course, the fault of the peasants. . . . Commissioners and communists must step in and teach them their business, says the London Times. Three months ago they said: Let there be rabbits, rabbits in millions, gadgrees rabbits, canned rabbits, rabbit literature, rabbit films, rabbit propaganda, rabbits, confound and all concerned get to work with a will, but the rabbit scheme is not to mature till 1931, and meantime one must eat. So now it is to be hoped: hence on a "pon Soviet rabbit." A deputy commissar very lately named Khinchuk has issued the fiat; the commissariat of agriculture has organized the scheme. The results are sure to be impressive. When the hens of Khinchuk chuck-chuck in their millions over their billions of eggs in the "controlled nests," then will Khinchuk chuckle, and the eyes and other portions of good Bolsheviks swell with fatness.

When a dog proclaims its ownership you may take its word for it—or its wag, its smile, its joyous recognition, to be more specific. Recently another dog, a "houn" dog named Sam, was recovered from a thief because the dog identified its owner to the satisfaction of the police. Human witnesses may perjure themselves, they may be in doubt. Even when they speak knowingly and truthfully they sometimes are suspected. A horse has no way of telling us unmistakably who is his master. A cat is either indifferent or is fickle in its attachments. But a dog makes no mistakes in recognition and his demonstration is beyond question. Even if he has been abused and should disown his master, he nevertheless is true. His is a language of affection, an expressive, convincing language.

Of the 15,115,000 bags of coffee exported from one country alone in 1927 more than half came to the United States. And of that half about a third came on the table mouse-colored and semi-solid at the bottom of the cup.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL SAID:

"When the microscope search of scepticism which has hunted the heavens and scanned the seas to disprove the existence of a Creator, has turned its attention to human society, and has found a place on this planet."

ten miles square, where a decent man can live in decency, comfort and security, supporting and educating his children unspolled and unspolled; a place where age is respected, infancy respected, manhood respected, womanhood honored, and human life held in due regard,—when sceptics can find such a place ten miles square on this globe, where the Gospel of Christ has not gone and cleared the way, and laid the foundations and made decency and security possible,—it will then be in order for the sceptical literate to move thither and ventilate their views. But as long as these very men are dependent upon the religion which they discard, for every privilege which they enjoy, they may well hesitate a little before they seek to rob the Christian of his hope, and humanity of its faith in that Savior who alone has given man that hope of life eternal, which makes life tolerable and society possible, and robs death of its terrors and the grave of its gloom."

The above beautiful lines were sent by Dr. and Mrs. J. G. Gehring and read in response to their names at the roll call of the First Congregational Church on Wednesday, Jan. 29.

Held as Sacred

by the Ancient Greeks
According to legend St. Patrick brought the doctrine of the cross to Ireland. One day he saw a tiny plant growing at his feet. He used it to illustrate the doctrine of the cross. The plant has three leaves, and is applied to the word for three-leaf plants, "trifolium." While the name shamrock has been applied to various plants, it is generally used to mean the clover. Shamrock has long been used with various superstitions. It is in the form of a cross, and is regarded as sacred by the people. It has been believed that a person carrying it would be protected from evil spirits or would be successful in his undertakings. If he under his pillow, he would find his beloved and a maiden slipping it, unseen, into the hand of her lover, assure him a safe journey.

of Snake Venom

Probed by Scientists
It has been stated on apparently reliable authority that snake venom will kill cold-blooded animals, such as frogs, toads, lizards and snakes. Systematic observation shows that it is not the case. Toads, which are tenacious of life, have been known to survive three days after being bitten by puff-adders or snakes, but in the end they succumb. Frogs often die almost instantaneously after being bitten. Again, it is said that the venom of two snakes of the same species do not affect each other. Though this is true in some cases, however, it is not true of all. Puff-adders appear immune from one another's venom. On the other hand, puff-adders that have been bitten by manihots, boom-slugs, and venomous South African snakes usually die, but not always. In one case a puff-adder which was bit with enough cobra poison to kill a man survived.

Electron and Molecule

The electron is the smallest known unit of electricity. It may be either of positive or negative. The atom is the smallest unit of any chemical element. A molecule is the smallest part into which any body can be divided without destroying its substance as such. It is identical with the atom as a unit of mercury or argon. It consists of the union of two or more atoms. According to the theory all material substances are composed of atoms of a comparatively small number of kinds, all of the same kind being uniform in weight and other properties. The atom is to be conceived as a complex system whose component parts are in rapid orbital motion.

The Winner

was in the habit of lunching at the same restaurant. One day he called the waiter to him and said, "I am going to give you a lump sum of every month. It will be convenient for me." "But I wonder if you'd mind me in advance for this month?" "Oh, that's a strange request. How much?" "I suppose you are hard up?" "No, sir," smiled John, slipping money into his pocket. "Only I'm here today."

Long-Lived Poets

On the whole, are a long-lived lot. "Looker-on" in the London Chronicle, and some records called of poets laureate. Of the office since the time of Bonaparte have reached a good old age. He held office for many years. For instance, lived to be Sir William Davenant eighty-eight, and Colley Cibber eighty-six. The average tenure of laureateship has been over years. Southey held it for years, and Tennyson for forty.

The Word "Anecdote"

we know that the word "anecdote" simply refers to a pithy account of any incident, usually a short, amusing narrative. Finally, however, an anecdote is a secret history, a sort of a history of unpublished events, this name being indicated by its source. In this sense that it is used, however, by Procopius in his history of the private life of Justinian the Great.—Kansas City Star.

Get in First and Last Word

Female of the species actually in the first and the last word. According to the magazine Good Girls learn to talk six weeks earlier than boys, while recent studies show that women live longer than men. Of the 40 centenarians who were last year, 30 were women. So the female deaths were more numerous than the male, below 80 numerous, showing that more men pass eighty than women.
